UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

MICROSOFT CORPORATION, a Washington corporation, Plaintiff, v. JOHN DOES 1-2, CONTROLLING COMPUTER BOTNETS AND THEREBY INJURING PLAINTIFF AND ITS CUSTOMERS, Defendants.	Case No. FILED UNDER SEAL

DECLARATION OF JASON B. LYONS IN SUPPORT OF MICROSOFT'S APPLICATION FOR AN EMERGENCY EX PARTE TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE RE PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

I, Jason B. Lyons, declare as follows:

1. I am a Senior Manager of Investigations in Microsoft Corporation's Digital Crimes Unit ("DCU") Malware & Cloud Crimes Team. I make this declaration in support of Microsoft's Application for An Emergency Temporary Restraining Order and Order To Show Cause Re Preliminary Injunction. I make this declaration of my own personal knowledge or on information and belief where indicated. If called as a witness, I could and would testify competently to the truth of the matters set forth herein.

2. In my role at Microsoft, I assess technological security threats to Microsoft and the impact of such threats on Microsoft's business and customers. Among my responsibilities are protecting Microsoft's online service assets from network-based attacks. I also participate in the investigation of botnets and participate in court-authorized countermeasures to neutralize and disrupt them. I have personally investigated and assisted in the court-authorized takedown of several botnets while at Microsoft, including the botnets known as Ramnit, ZeroAccess, and Dorkbot. Before joining Microsoft, I worked for Xerox as the Manager of Xerox's Cyber Intelligence Response Team. I also worked for Affiliated Computer Services ("ACS") prior to Xerox's acquisition of ACS. While at ACS, I provided in-court testimony in connection with a temporary restraining order application concerning misappropriation of ACS's intellectual property. Prior to entering the private sector, from 1998 to 2005, I served as a Counterintelligence Special Agent in the United States Army. My duties as a Counterintelligence Special Agent included investigating and combating cyber-attacks against the United States. I obtained certifications in counterintelligence, digital forensics, computer crime investigations, and digital media collection from the United States Department of Defense. A true and correct copy of the current version of my curricula vitae is attached to this declaration as Exhibit 1.

3. I have conducted an investigation of the structure and function of a botnet architecture called "Necurs" as well as the activities carried out through this botnet, and an assessment of the impact on Microsoft's business and on users of the Internet. The Necurs botnet has caused, and continues to cause, extreme damage to Microsoft and other parties which, if allowed to continue, will be compounded as the case proceeds.

I. DEFENDANTS

4. The identity and specific locations of the Defendants who have set up and currently operate the Necurs botnet is currently uncertain. However, we have detected instances of the Necurs botnet in many different countries, including the United States, and it is probable that the criminals operating that botnet are also located in different countries.

5. Defendants control the Necurs botnet through command and control infrastructure compromised of IP addresses, Internet domains and name servers that are all maintained on an interconnected network. On information and belief, they use common tools, a common codebase, and common tactics to establish and run the botnet. They receive support and instructions on how to configure and operate the Necurs botnet from a core set of criminals. In addition, some of them appear to share botnet command and control resources. In sum, my investigation has uncovered what is, in effect, a Necurs botnet criminal enterprise, comprised of Defendants who develop, commercialize and support the Necurs botnet using infrastructure designed for the purpose of carrying out the botnet criminal activity.

II. BOTNETS IN GENERAL

6. A botnet is a network made up of end user computers connected to the Internet that have been infected with a certain type of malicious software ("malware" or a "Trojan") that places them under the control of the individuals or organizations who utilize the infected end user computers to conduct illegal activity. These infected computers are sometimes referred to as "bots." A botnet network may be compromised of as few as hundreds or as many as tens of thousands or millions of infected end-user computers, thus creating a network of bots.

7. Once an individual or organization has created a botnet, they can use its scale, combined computing power, and ability to monitor and manipulate the online activities of the infected computer devices to engage in malicious, illegal activity. These illegal activities range from attacking other computers on the Internet; installing other forms of malicious software; sending spam email; stealing credentials for online accounts, including financial accounts; stealing personal identifying information; stealing confidential data; selling or renting access to the infected computer devices to other cybercriminals; and other illegal activities.

III. THE INVESTIGATION OF THE NECURS BOTNET

8. The botnet at issue in this case—the "Necurs" botnet—is a prolific and globally dispersed spam and malware distribution botnet. I and other Microsoft investigators have been able to identify full details about the Necurs botnet, including its command and control infrastructure, the methods of communications amongst infected computers, how the botnet transmits spam and other malicious threats to innocent computers, and the Necurs botnet's fallback solutions to evade detection and attempts to disrupt the botnet's operation. The Necurs botnet has infected millions of computer devices around the world. Necurs is a complex and constantly evolving botnet, ranging from operating as a spam botnet delivering banking Trojans and ransomware, to developing a proxy service, as well as cryptomining and DDoS capabilities.

9. Once the Necurs malware infects a new victim computing device, it contacts a command and control computer over the Internet from which it begins to receive instructions and additional malware modules. This effectively places the infected computer under the command of the operators of the botnet.

10. I have obtained copies of the Necurs code that the Defendants deliver and install on infected end-user computers that are part of the botnet, and have carried out an examination of that code. I have researched the command and control infrastructure of the Necurs botnet. I have researched the infrastructure used to propagate the Necurs botnet. I have also reviewed literature published by other well-regarded computer security investigators concerning the Necurs botnet, and their findings have confirmed my own conclusions regarding the Necurs botnet malware. Through these and related investigative steps, I have developed detailed information about the size, scope, and illegal activities of the Necurs botnet.

11. In the course of Microsoft's investigation into the Necurs botnet, we analyzed approximately 5,245 samples of Necurs malware. As part of the investigation, I and other Microsoft investigators purposely infected several investigator-controlled computers with the malware that the Necurs botnet deploys. This placed the computers under the control of the cybercriminals operating the botnet to enable me and other Microsoft investigators to monitor the telemetry of the Necurs infrastructure and to monitor all of the illicit communications going to and coming from the infected computers. We then monitored and analyzed the activities of the infected computers and observed initial beacons to the command and control server. We carefully analyzed the changes that the Necurs malware makes to Microsoft's operating system and application software during this infection process, and we reverse-engineered the malware to determine how it operates. I participated in and reviewed these investigative techniques.

12. During our investigation, I and other Microsoft investigators observed the infected computers connect to and receive instructions from the Necurs botnet's command and control servers, and through this method, we were able to identify by domain name and IP address of the command and control computers used to control the Necurs botnet under investigation. Based on our investigation and analysis, Microsoft has determined that Necurs is a substantial and robust delivery mechanism for phishing attacks, distributing ransomware, financial targeted malware, other criminally motivated spam email campaigns, and includes a distributed denial-of-service ("DDoS") module designed to disrupt normal traffic of a targeted server.

13. I therefore conclude that the primary purpose of the botnet code, the Necurs botnet and the Defendants' operation is to send spam email and to act as a delivery mechanism for additional malware designed for the purpose of stealing account credentials, personal identification information, monetary funds as well as to further propagate the botnet infrastructure itself. I also conclude from these same facts, upon information and belief, that the Defendants must have known and intended that the botnet code, the Necurs botnet and Defendants' operation of such botnet was to defraud end-user victims of the Necurs botnet, by means of fraudulent pretenses and representations transmitted over the Internet, as further described below. As further described below, Microsoft has been directly injured in its business and property by these Defendants' acts and their coordinated pattern of acts.

IV. ORGANIZATION OF THE NECURS BOTNET

14. As stated above, a "botnet" is a network of computing devices, connected to the Internet, that are infected with a particular type of malicious software ("malware"). The malware gives the individuals propagating the botnet—for example, the Defendants in this matter—remote control via the Internet over the operation of the infected computing devices. Botnets can generally take on one of several structures that allow a single criminal or criminal organization to control the vast array of compromised computing devices (sometimes known as "bots") in the botnet.

15. Like other botnets, the Necurs botnet is comprised of a large number of victim computers that have been infected by the Defendants with the Necurs malware. Further, the Necurs botnet includes computers that have a "command and control" purpose. These command and control computers are utilized by the Defendants to transfer command and control instructions to the infected victim computers, in order to maintain control over the operation of those victim computers and to carry out the numerous types of harmful activities described more fully later in this declaration. Further detail regarding the infected victim computers and the command and control computers is set forth below.

A. Infected Victim Computers

16. The Necurs botnet is comprised of millions of infected end user computers, of the type commonly found in businesses, living rooms, schools, libraries, and Internet cafes around the world.

17. In general, the Defendant operators of the Necurs botnet are constantly engaged in infecting additional end user computers. To counter them, numerous software providers and software security firms are constantly engaged in trying to remove the Necurs malware from those computers. Microsoft has conducted an independent investigation to determine the number of computing devices infected by the Necurs malware. The total number of infected computers in the Necurs botnet, over time, has been massive. Based on our investigation, we have observed that over 9 million computers have been infected by the Necurs malware.

18. The infected victim computers are responsible for performing the daily work of the botnet. Further, owners of the infected victim computers are targets of the Defendants, as Defendants can use these computers to send spam email, encrypt the computers with ransomware and demand a ransom or install financial theft malware which enables them to ultimately steal money directly from these individuals' bank accounts, as well as to steal personal information from the owners of the infected computers and engage in other malicious activity directed at these victims.

B. Command and Control Computers

19. The command and control computers are specialized computers and/or software ("servers"). Defendants purchased or leased these servers and use them to send commands to control the Necurs botnet's infected victim computers. The command and control computers send the most fundamental instructions, updates, and commands, and overall control of the botnets is carried out from these computers. Command and control computers include the servers at various IP addresses, as well as the servers located at the domain listed in Exhibits 2 and 3 to this declaration, which are described more fully below.

20. Each instance of Necurs malware infecting a user's computing device is preprogrammed to connect and communicate with several of these command and control servers. When such a connection is made, the servers can download instructions or additional malware to the infected computing device and upload stolen information from it.

21. To create the command and control computers, Defendants set up accounts with web-hosting providers—i.e., companies, usually legitimate, that provide facilities where computers can be connected through high-capacity connections to the Internet and locate their servers in those facilities. By contacting a command and control server, the Necurs malware can receive updated commands and modules from and communicate with the Defendants.

1. Overview Of Command And Control Communications Channels

22. After the Necurs malware infects a victim computing device, it connects over the Internet to one of its pre-programmed command and control servers. In its first communication, it sends the command and control server the victim computer's IP address, the version of Windows running on the computer, a unique computing device identifier and a machine language identifier. At this point, it is ready to begin executing commands sent to it by the Defendant botnet operators.

23. The Defendants are able to send and receive communications between their command and control computers and the infected victim computers in the Necurs botnet, by means of three different communication channels. Figure 1 below illustrates these communication channels of the Necurs botnet. These three communications channels are summarized as follows, with further detail in the sections below.

a. First, the primary communication channel between infected victim computers and the command and control computers (sometimes abbreviated in this declaration as "C2") are either particular IP addresses controlled by Defendants (which are reached by IP address to IP address communications utilizing Hypertext Transfer Protocol or "HTTP") or particular domain names that are preprogramed into the Necurs malware (referred to as "hardcoded" domain). Figure 2 below illustrates the exchange of commands and handshake information between infected victim computers and the command and control computers.

b. Second, a secondary communication channel between infected victim computers and the command and control computers is comprised of IP addresses distributed throughout the botnet via direct download from command and control servers or through a "peer-to-peer" network (sometimes abbreviated as "P2P") which is comprised of other Necurs-infected victim computers.

c. Third, as a final "fallback" communications channel, the botnet also uses internet domain names generated by a Domain Generation Algorithm ("DGA") that is contained within the Necurs malware on infected victim computers.

2. Primary Command And Control Communications Channel: Defendant Controlled IP Addresses And Hardcoded Domain

24. The primary command and control communications channel between infected victim computers and Defendants' command and control computers is comprised of particular IP addresses associated with servers directly controlled by Defendants and "hardcoded" domain names that are preprogrammed into the Necurs malware.

a. An "IP address" (i.e. "Internet Protocol" address) can be thought of as the physical location on the Internet of a particular computer. An "IP address" is a unique string of numbers separated by a period, such as "149.154.152.161" that identifies each computer attached to the Internet. Defendants must lease such computers from companies that provide "hosting" services, and which assign to those computers particular IP addresses.

b. A "domain name" (commonly thought of as a website name) is an alphanumeric string separated by periods, such as "Microsoft.com," serving as an address for a computer network. To create an active domain, Defendants must register the domain name with any one of the many domain name registrars in the world. During the registration process, Defendants must associate the domain name with one or more specific IP addresses. Each active domain name on the Internet has a corresponding IP address at which the website content is located.

25. Once Necurs infiltrates a victim's computer and the malware is installed, the victim computer receives instructions from the botnet command and control servers associated with the primary IP addresses directly controlled by Defendants or from the hardcoded domain names.

26. The primary command and control IP addresses are updated on a weekly basis. Over the course of Necurs' existence, we were able to identify five (5) to twelve (12) active core command and control IP addresses that would continuously distribute information through the botnet network. Our investigation confirmed that the command and control IP addresses change on a weekly basis. However, recently, we have not seen any information being distributed from the primary command and control IP addresses that have previously been identified. Thus, the botnet is not communicating via the primary command and control IP addresses. Microsoft is continuously monitoring whether any new, or old, primary command and control IP addresses attempt to establish communication with the botnet. If such are identified, those IP addresses are then reported by Microsoft and distributed to global Computer Emergency Response Teams ("CERTs")[1] and Internet Service Providers ("ISPs") responsible for those IP addresses, globally, via the Microsoft Cyber Threat Intelligence Program ("CTIP").[2] Microsoft has built a comprehensive list of partners, including global ISPs and country CERTs, which will then block specific botnet traffic to the reported primary command and control IP address as part of the disruption strategy. Microsoft will continue to work with such parties during the course of this action. In this way, any attempted use by Defendants of the primary command and control IP addresses will be prevented.

[1] CERTs are either government or private sector organizations that work closely with Internet Service Providers to block or mitigate malicious IP addresses and similar threats.

[2] The Microsoft Digital Crimes Unit's Cyber Threat Intelligence Program (CTIP) generates actionable cyber threat intelligence from DCU-lead malware disruption operations and distributes that threat intelligence to over 165 public and private partners in an effort to safeguard people and organizations from digital threats. CTIP's public and private partners include national Computer Emergency Response Teams (CERTs), global Internet Service Providers (ISPs), and Critical Infrastructure Information Sharing and Analysis Centers (ISACs).

27. Because the botnet is not communicating via the primary command and control IP addresses, and given the disruption strategy if Defendants attempt to use those IP addresses, one means of command and control communications available to the botnet are the "hardcoded" Internet domain names in the Necurs malware itself. The Defendants have used the command and control domain to distribute and propagate the botnet code, to receive communications from the botnet and to control the botnet. During our investigation into Necurs, we have identified one command and control hardcoded domain that has been used to propagate the botnet. The one hardcoded domain is currently dormant, but Defendants have registered this domain in the past and have the capabilities to use it if other methods of communication fail. This fact provides an opportunity for Microsoft to commence this action to disable the operation of the botnet, by disabling the domain name-based command and control infrastructure. A true and correct list of this malicious hardcoded command and control domain name is attached as Appendix A to the Complaint and the Proposed Temporary Restraining Order, and also attached to this declaration as Exhibit 2.

28. The relief sought in this case is directed at disabling this malicious domain name that was registered and used by Defendants. The command and control domain can be disrupted by transferring the domain to a domain registrar account under Microsoft's control, as requested in Microsoft's proposed temporary restraining order in this matter. Granting Microsoft possession of the domain in Exhibit 2 will enable Microsoft to channel all communications to the domain to secure servers, and thereby cut off one of the only remaining means that Defendants have to communicate with the infected computers. By doing so, the Defendants will not be able to continue to control the Necurs botnet or use it to carry out harmful activities.

3. Secondary Command And Control Communications Channel: IP Address Lists Distributed By The Necurs "Peer-To-Peer" Network

29. In addition to the primary command and control channels, discussed above, Necurs uses a sophisticated peer-to-peer ("P2P")[3] backup communications channel for the botnet infrastructure if the primary communication link between the primary command and control IP addresses and the infected victim computers break, as is currently the case given that the primary command and control IP addresses are not in use and Microsoft has in place measures to disrupt that primary infrastructure. This method of communication is active. The peer-to-peer channel leverages victim machines as a communication channel and keeps all those machines—also known as bots—connected with existing command and control IP address lists at any given period of time. Both cryptographically signed peer-to-peer messages and TCP and UDP protocols[4] are deployed to ensure this backup channel remains active. Similarly, there is a special class of Necurs victim computers called "super nodes." These are computers which are directly connected to the internet and not behind a firewall. These victim computers are promoted to be part of the botnet infrastructure to relay configuration files amongst the victim peer-to-peer network. A super node list of IP addresses is then circulated amongst victims to keep the network up to date.

30. The peer-to-peer structure is something referred to as "hybrid P2P." In this architecture, commands are generally sent from centralized command and control servers (which is an ordinary architecture of many traditional botnets). However, because new command and control server addresses can be pushed to all infected computers via the peer-to-peer network at [3] In general, and in the context of Necurs, a "peer-to-peer" network is a computer network using a distributed architecture. In peer-to-peer networks, all the computers and devices that are part of them are referred to as peers, and they share and exchange instructions, data or workloads. Each peer in a peer-to-peer network is equal to the other peers. In the Necurs botnet, infected victim computers act as peers.

[4] "TCP" refers to "Transmission Control Protocol" and "UDP" refers to "User Datagram Protocol." These are two foundational structures for organizing and transmitting data packets on the Internet.

any time, the botnet maintains the usability of a traditional botnet, but with the resilience of a peer-to-peer architecture. In order to enable peer-to-peer communication, a random port number is generated and stored into the Windows operating system registry. This port is then bound on both the UDP and TCP protocol allowing peer-to-peer communication to work over either protocol, although UDP is the most dominant. The Necurs botnet has over 1000 IP address and port combinations stored within the initial configuration which will be contacted one by one at a rate of one per second until a reply is received, after that the rate is adjusted to one per minute.

31. Microsoft has developed a comprehensive list of these command and control IP addresses used by the Necurs botnet and has developed automated code (which mimics a Necurs infected machine) that cycles through the most recent distributed lists of command and control IP addresses seeking communication. If a command and control IP address responds with the correct response and encryption key, the IP address is then reported by Microsoft and distributed to global Computer Emergency Response Teams and Internet Service Providers responsible for those IP addresses, globally, via the Microsoft Cyber Threat Intelligence Program. Again, Microsoft's comprehensive list of partners, including global ISPs and country CERTs, will then block specific botnet traffic to the reported command and control IP address as part of the disruption strategy. These actions will also cut off one of the only remaining means that Defendants have to communicate with the infected computers.

32. Similarly, Microsoft has developed automated code (which mimics a Necurs infected machine) which monitors this peer-to-peer network looking for new configuration files. If a new configuration file is reported on the network it is reported to other Microsoft sensors for aforementioned verification process. As part of the disruption strategy, Microsoft will be publishing all known super node IP addresses in the Microsoft Cyber Threat Intelligence Program partner network for remediation. Super nodes will be given the highest priority for the remediation strategy as they will deliver the largest disruptive impact. Thus, these actions too will cut off one of the only active means that Defendants have to communicate with the infected computers.

4. Third "Fallback" Command And Control Communications Channel: Dynamically Generated Lists Of Unregistered Domains

33. When all of the command and control communications channels discussed above are disrupted and Defendants cannot use them to communicate with the infected victim computers, then the Necurs malware on the infected victim computers detects that fact and reverts to domain generation algorithms ("DGA") embedded within the Necurs malware, in order to create domains as a "fallback" backup communication channel for the botnet. DGAs are algorithms that rely upon a pseudorandom schema to generate a large number of domain names that can be used as rendezvous points with the command and control servers. In other words, the Necurs malware creates lists of domains and attempts to connect to them to receive command and control instructions, with the expectation that the Defendants will register some or all of those domains and be able to re-exert control over the botnet. The domains are pseudorandomly generated strings of letters or numbers (for example, "iioxtbyqnuajqftp[.]TLD" etc.). They do not have any commercial value and do not represent any real words. The purpose of the DGA is to create lists of domains that are not yet registered and which are not likely at all to be registered by any party. In this way, after losing control of the botnet (for example, through the means of disruption described above), the Defendants can register these domains, knowing that the infected victim computers will eventually be reaching out to those domains seeking instructions. The large number of potential rendezvous points makes it increasingly difficult to effectively shut down botnets, since the infected computers will attempt to contact some of these new domain names every day to receive updates or commands. The Necurs malware attempts to connect to these DGA domains when the IP address-based command and control infrastructure and the hardcoded domain-based infrastructure is not in use, not available or is disrupted.

34. Each victim computer maintains a DGA list as a backup communication channel. Each sub botnet group has a unique DGA seed which allows communication segmentation from the overall Necurs botnet. The Necurs DGAs are capable of generating up to 250,000 domains per month across 43 TLDs.[5] Figure 3 shows the capabilities of all the Necurs DGAs.

35. Over the course of our investigation into Necurs, we have identified 6,144,000 prospective DGA command and control domains that the Necurs botnet will attempt to contact once the IP address infrastructure and hardcoded domain infrastructure is disrupted, as described above. Microsoft has worked with non-U.S. TLD providers, both directly and working with relevant government and private sector partners, to address that body of the DGA "fallback" domain infrastructure. With respect to such DGA domain infrastructure having a U.S. nexus, it is necessary to obtain an order from this Court to prevent the Defendants from registering such infrastructure. A true and correct list of these DGA domains is attached as Appendix B to the Complaint and the Proposed Temporary Restraining Order, and also attached hereto as Exhibit 3

[5] "TLDs" refers to "top level domains," such as ".com," ".net," ".org" or any other indicator of the highest level domain space within the global Domain Name System. Additional context may be found at: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Top-level_domain to this declaration. The relief sought in this case is directed at preventing future registration of these malicious domain names that the Defendants have configured the malware to access in the future. By disabling and preventing future registration of these domain names, the Defendants will not be able to continue to control the Necurs botnet or use it to carry out harmful activities.

V. NECURS HAS ATTACKED MANY MICROSOFT CUSTOMERS IN NEW YORK AND THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

36. Through its investigation, Microsoft has determined that Necurs has affirmatively targeted Microsoft customers in New York, including in the Eastern District of New York.

37. I have recently investigated IP addresses known to be associated with Necurs. These IP addresses were seen logging into accounts compromised by Necurs. Technology exists to determine the geographic location of IP addresses. Using such technology, I determined the geographical location of these IP addresses collected during the sample period. I plotted such IP addresses on maps of New York and the Eastern District of New York, to represent the location of the relevant activity. Each marker on the maps represents at least one computer that is associated with accounts compromised by Necurs. As can be seen below, in Figure 4, 5 and 6 the Necurs Defendants have directed their activity toward victims located in New York, the Eastern District of New York and the United States.

VI. NECURS CAUSES SEVERE HARM

38. Necurs inflicts severe harm on individuals whose computing devices it infects. Once a computing device is infected with Necurs, Defendants can use the victims' computers to send spam email or to deliver other malware that, among other things, enables Defendants to take control of victims' computers and extort money from them, steal their online banking credentials, or constantly monitor the online activities of its unknowing victims and also send commands and instructions to the infected computing device to control it surreptitiously. Defendants' primary goal, as made evident by the Necurs' functionality, is to propagate spam email, deliver financial theft malware, deliver ransomware, enable attacks against other computers and to steal online account login IDs, passwords, and other personal identifying information.

A. Necurs Causes Severe Harm By Making Unauthorized Changes To The Victim Computers And The Windows Operating System

39. Necurs severely damages the computing devices it infects, making low-level changes to the operating system and, with respect to Windows 7, degrades the primary security defense of most computing devices – the antivirus software – by blocking the computing device from getting anti-virus software updates. This functionality, however, is not possible on a computing device running an updated Windows 7, with updated antivirus software, and in Windows 10, a more recent version of the Windows operating system. As a result, for devices using an outdated Windows 7 without updated antivirus protections, Necurs not only cripples the security mechanism that might result in removal of Necurs from the computing device, it may leave victim's computing devices exposed to against many other types of malware.

40. Necurs also inflicts substantial damage on Microsoft whose products and trademarks Defendants systematically abuse as part of the botnet's fraudulent operations. For example, once the Defendants infect a computer with the Necurs malware, it compromises the underlying code of Microsoft's Windows operating system. However, the compromised Windows operating system does not appear any different to the user of the infected computer. The user, thus, thinks the compromised operating system is developed and distributed by Microsoft, despite the fact that it is the operators of the botnet that are compromising the operating system. This harms Microsoft's reputation and goodwill among the public.

41. During the infection process, the Necurs malware will copy itself to the user's computer. Depending on the variant, the file can be installed in any one of a number of possible locations. For example, in the context of Microsoft Windows 7, the Necurs malware changes a number of settings in the user's Windows registry. In particular, the Necurs malware changes the following registry entry to ensure that its copy runs at each Windows start. In the following Windows 7 registry subkey, Necurs takes the following action:

HKLM\Software\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\Run
Sets value: "syshost32"
With data: "%windir%\Installer\<random GUID>\syshost.exe"

42. This is a database of configuration settings and options built into Windows operating systems—to ensure that the malware is launched automatically every time the computing device is started. As can be seen, the Defendants fraudulently compromise a specific component of the Microsoft Windows 7 operating system that both uses the "Microsoft" and "Windows" trademarks, in order to conceal the activities of the botnet, trade on Microsoft's trademarks and deceive end-user victims of the operating system.

B. Necurs Causes Severe Harm By Sending Spam Email From Victim Computers

43. One of the principal activities of the Necurs malware is to cause victim computers to send massive amounts of spam email to other victims on the Internet. Figure 7 shows spam statistics based on the observations of a Microsoft Digital Crimes Unit spam "crawler" that is analyzing the Necurs botnet over a two-week period. The red indicates the location of the Azure data center; the blue indicates the location of Microsoft Office 365 services receiving weaponized Necurs delivered spam email (1.5 million); the green indicates the location of Microsoft consumer email services receiving weaponized Necurs spam email (765,000); the purple indicates the location of non-Microsoft email services (Yahoo!, Gmail, AOL, etc.) receiving weaponized Necurs spam email (22 million). Hotmail.com, a Microsoft-owned trademark, was the third highest consumer email service receiving weaponized Necurs delivered spam.

44. The Necurs botnet delivers spam by converting a victim computer into an email server that is capable of sending a vast number of emails per day, as indicated above. The victim computer receives specialized templates of the spam email that it is supposed to send, as well as target email addresses to which the spam email is sent. Figure 8 shows how Necurs delivers spam.

45. The Necurs botnet is an extremely scaled infrastructure capable of sending a massive volume of spam and is one of the largest bodies of infrastructure in the spam email threat ecosystem. As part of our investigation, I and other Microsoft investigators infected devices with malware to join the Necurs botnet. Once infected, we analyzed the volume of spam emails that an infected computer would distribute, over a fifty-eight (58) day period. Our investigation showed that one infected Necurs computer sent a total of 3.8 million spam emails to over 40.6 million potential victims.

C. Necurs Causes Severe Harm By Distributing And Installing Other Types Of Dangerous Malware

46. Necurs is used in a variety of illegal activities, but it is primarily known as a downloader/dropper for delivering major malware families in what is known as a "pay-per-install" criminal business model that delivers ransomware that locks a victim's computer and demands payment to unlock it, banking Trojans that steal funds from victim accounts, and a wide range of other types of malware. The malware families distributed by Necurs that I have identified include Game Over Zeus (a type of banking Trojan), Dridex (a type of banking Trojan), Locky (a type of ransomware) and Trickbot (a type of banking Trojan). In other words, one of the Necurs botnet's major activities is downloading and spreading secondary malware onto Necurs-infected computers. Necurs infects a victim's system by being downloaded by other malware, through either spammed email attachments or malicious advertisements. The most common techniques are email attachments with macros or JavaScript to download malware from different locations. Necurs has also developed the capability to conduct distributed denial of service attacks (DDoS).

47. In order to install such malicious software, once on a system with Windows 7 installed, Necurs utilizes its kernel mode rootkit capabilities to disable a large number of security applications, including Windows Firewall, both to protect itself and other malware on the infected system.[6] Necurs is modular, in that it allows the operators to change how they utilize Necurs – over time, Necurs has been used as a botnet that delivers spam email, as a delivery mechanism for ransomware, financial malware, for running pump and dump stock scams, for fake pharmaceutical spam email and for "Russian dating" spam and scams.

48. The Necurs malware can be commanded to download and install additional malware on the infected computing device, causing users whose computing devices are infected with Necurs to be victimized by other types of malware as well. Each of these secondary malware infections makes further changes to the user's computing device, including by adding files, changing registry settings, opening additional backdoors that allow control by other cybercriminals, and allowing yet further sets of malware to be downloaded onto the computing device. All of these malware variants are designed to attack computing devices running Microsoft Windows operating systems and may themselves be connected to other criminal botnet infrastructure beyond Necurs receiving additional commands.

[6] This functionality of the Necurs botnet is not possible on computers running Microsoft Windows 10.

49. My investigation has also uncovered evidence that the Necurs botnet engages in downloading the same type of secondary malware over the same period of time. This evidence confirms that the Necurs botnet is being used in coordinated malware campaigns for the purpose of infecting computers of innocent victims.

50. The individual Necurs botnet operators will receive payment based on how many computers they can infect with secondary malware. Each successful download results in payment to the operator of the Necurs command and control server. By keeping track of which particular sub botnet the individual infected computer belongs, the operator of the command and control server can divide the earnings among the different Necurs botnet operators.

51. Under these circumstances, the Defendants have a vested interest in increasing the number of computers belonging to their Necurs botnet, as that relates directly to the number of computers they can attempt to infect with secondary malware.

D. Necurs Causes Severe Harm Both To Microsoft's Reputation, Brands And Goodwill With Its Customers

52. The Necurs malware infection itself harms Microsoft and Microsoft's customers by damaging the customers' computing devices and the software installed on their computing devices, including Microsoft's proprietary Windows operating systems. The Necurs malware is designed to infect and run on computer devices equipped with the Windows operating system. The Windows operating system is licensed by Microsoft to its users.

53. A Necurs malware infection begins with the download to the user's computing device of the executable files that Necurs uses to install itself on the computer device. The installation of malicious software in and of itself damages the user's computing device and the Windows operating system on the user's computing device. During the infection of a user's computing device, Necurs makes changes to the deepest and most sensitive levels of the computing device's operating system, including the kernel, registry, and system files. One purpose of the change is to disable Windows security features.

54. Microsoft's customers whose computing devices are infected with Necurs are damaged by these changes to Windows, which alter the normal and approved settings and functions of the user's operating system, place hooks into the operating system so Necurs can hide its presence and activities, destabilize it, and forcibly conscript the computing device into the botnet.

55. Customers are usually unaware of the fact that their computing devices are infected and have become part of the Necurs botnet. Even if aware of the infection, they often lack technical resources or skills to resolve the problem, allowing their computing devices to by misused indefinitely, as manual steps to remove the malicious software may be difficult for ordinary users.

56. Microsoft devotes significant computing and human resources to combating Necurs and other malware infections and helping customers determine whether or not their computing devices are infected and, if so, cleaning them. Not only does Microsoft expend resources in helping users combat Necurs, these efforts require in-depth technical investigations and extensive efforts to calculate and remediate harm caused to Microsoft's customers. Microsoft, as a provider of the Windows operating systems, must also incorporate security features in an attempt to stop installation of the Necurs malware and other malicious software that is distributed by the Necurs botnet. Microsoft has expended significant resources to investigate and track the Necurs Defendants' illegal activities and to counter and remediate the damage caused by the Necurs botnet to Microsoft, its customers, and the general public.

57. Necurs irreparably harms Microsoft by damaging its reputation, brands, and customer goodwill. Defendants physically alter and corrupt Microsoft products such as the Microsoft Windows products mentioned above. Trademark registrations for the marks infringed by Defendants are attached to Microsoft's Complaint as Appendix C.

58. In effect, once infected, altered, and controlled by Necurs, the Windows operating system ceases to operate normally and become tools for Defendants to conduct their theft. Yet, they still bear the Microsoft and Windows trademarks. This is obviously meant to and does mislead Microsoft's customers, and it causes extreme damage to Microsoft's brands and trademarks.

59. Microsoft has invested substantial resources in developing high-quality products and services. Due to the high quality and effectiveness of Microsoft's products and services and the expenditures of significant resources by Microsoft to market those products and services, Microsoft has generated substantial goodwill with its customers, has established strong brands, has developed the Microsoft name and the names of its products and services into strong and famous world-wide symbols that are well-recognized within its channels of trade. Microsoft has registered trademarks representing the quality of its products and services and its brand, including Microsoft and Windows.

60. The activities of the Necurs botnet injure Microsoft and its reputation, brand, and goodwill because users subject to the negative effects of these malicious applications incorrectly believe that Microsoft and Windows are the sources of their computing device problems. As explained above, because of the Necurs botnet, users of infected computing devices will experience degraded device performance. There is a great risk that users may attribute this problem to Microsoft and associate these problems with Microsoft's Windows products, thereby diluting and tarnishing the value of the Microsoft and Windows trademarks and brands.

61. To carry out the intrusion into computing devices, Defendants cause the Necurs malware to make repeated copies of Microsoft's trademarks onto computing devices, in the form of file names, domain names, target names, and/or registry paths containing the trademarks "Microsoft" and "Windows." These uses of Microsoft's trademarks are designed to cause the intrusion into the user's computing device and to confuse the user into believing that the software installed is a legitimate part of the Windows operating system, when it is not.

62. Based on my experience assessing cyber threats and the impact on business, I conclude that customers may, and often do, incorrectly attribute to Microsoft the negative impact of the Necurs botnet and other malware downloaded to their computing devices as a result of having their computers hijacked and infected with a variety of malware, described earlier in this declaration. Further, based on my experience, I conclude that there is a serious risk that customers may move from Microsoft's products and services because of such activities. Further, there may be significant challenges to having such customers return, given the cost they bear to switch to new products and perceived risks.

VII. THE NECURS BOTNET'S COMMAND AND CONTROL INFRASTRUCTURE IS DESIGNED TO EVADE AND WITHSTAND TECHNICAL COUNTER-MEASURES

63. The most vulnerable points in the Necurs botnet architecture are the command and control IP addresses and domain names, as they can be identified and, if disconnected from the Internet, the botnet's communications with infected end-user computers will be severed and propagation of the botnet disabled. As discussed above, I have observed that certain features of the command and control infrastructure enable the botnets to better withstand technical counter-measures. For example, over time, the set of IP addresses and domains associated with the command and control servers' changes. Certain IP addresses and domains fall out of use by the infected end-user computers and the Defendants. New IP addresses and domains are added to those that the infected end-user computers used to communicate with. In essence, the set of IP addresses and domains used in the command and control infrastructure is dynamic, making attempts to disable the botnet more challenging.

64. Also, I have observed that if infected computers are unable to contact command and control servers, some versions of the Necurs botnet code will attempt to establish contact with the botnet through a fallback mechanism of dynamically generated fallback domains, discussed earlier in this declaration. For this reason, preservation of evidence regarding Defendants' botnet infrastructure is critical to detecting and future remediation of potential fallback infrastructure.

65. Necurs is designed to be resistant to technical countermeasures. Therefore, part of my investigation involved understanding Necurs' defensive features so as to better devise a plan to dismantle its harmful infrastructure.

A. The Necurs Botnet Has Resilient Command And Control Infrastructure

66. A first set of defensive mechanisms makes the command and control structure of Necurs resilient against countermeasures. Necurs malware is programmed to attempt connect with a set of command and control IP addresses and domains. Upon infecting a user's computer, the malware will consult its internal list of IP addresses and domains and will begin trying to connect over the Internet with at least one of them. It continuously cycles through that list attempting to establish a connection. It does this until one of the IP addresses or domains answers back, confirming to the infected computer that it has established a connection with the Necurs command and control infrastructure. Defendants can update the list of command and control IP addresses and domains. This has several ramifications.

67. First, if Microsoft takes possession of only the currently active infrastructure, each Necurs-infected computer may be able to establish contact with another of its DGA command and control domains. To regain control of the Necurs-infected computers, Defendants at that point need only register one of the alternative DGA domains, associate it with an IP address on the Internet, and establish another command and control server at that address. Therefore, it is necessary to take possession of all of the DGA domains currently identified, not just the infrastructure that is currently being used.

68. Second, the Defendants could potentially install updated malware on the infected computers and cause them to communicate with a new list of IP addresses and domain names. Because Defendants install so many additional variants of malware on Necurs infected computers, it is also possible that they could regain control over the computer through one of the other malware infections. If Defendants are able to shift the infected computers to a new command and control infrastructure before Necurs is completely disabled, it would be futile to take possession of the set of domain names uncovered through our investigation, as the Necurs-infected computers would be communicating with a completely new set of domains. Thus, stealth is required to disable all command and control domains at one time.

69. Further, based on my experience observing the operation of numerous botnets, prior legal actions involving botnets, and my observations of the specific architecture of the Necurs botnet, I believe Defendants would take swift preemptive action to defend the botnet if they were to learn of Microsoft's impending action against it. They would act both to move the command and control infrastructure to new domains, but also to destroy evidence on the current command and control domains. I am informed and believe there have been prior instances where security researchers or the government attempted to curb injury caused by botnets, but allowed the botnet operators to receive notice. In these cases, the botnet operators quickly moved the botnet infrastructure to new, unidentified locations on the Internet and took other countermeasures causing the botnet to continue its operations and destroying or concealing evidence of the botnet's operations. Therefore, taking possession of the current command and control infrastructure must be done without giving prior notice to the Defendants.

70. In sum, a piecemeal or prematurely disclosed approach to disconnecting Necurs' command and control infrastructure will fail. Unless, simultaneously, Microsoft takes action on the Necurs IP addresses, as discussed above, and pursuant to Court order all traffic to any of the command and control domains is simultaneously redirected to secure computers or such domains are prevented from being registered, Defendants will be able to shift the command and control infrastructure to new domains through its DGA program or other mechanisms. Without the planned disruption strategy and requested Court order, disablement of the botnet would be impossible and mitigation and cleaning of victims computers in the future would be precluded.

B. Computers Infected With Necurs Malware Are Difficult To Clean

71. A second set of defensive mechanisms employed by the Necurs botnet makes it difficult to clean infected computers and restore them to normal operation.

72. First, some Necurs variants encrypt communications between infected computers and the command and control infrastructure. This includes the stolen information uploaded from the infected computer. Further, the configuration files that control the manner in which the Necurs malware communicates with the command and control infrastructure are always encrypted. This makes it virtually impossible to disrupt the botnet by issuing commands to the infected computers.

73. Second, in the context of Windows 7, Necurs effectively cripples anti-virus services on infected computers. The Necurs malware contains a list of antivirus software vendor websites, and it keeps the infected computer from connecting with those sites. Consequently, the virus signature files on the infected computer are never updated in a way that would allow the antivirus software to identify and remove the Necurs infection and/or secondary infections.

VIII. DISRUPTING NECURS

74. As discussed above, while the Necurs botnet's primary command and control infrastructure are IP addresses, currently there are no primary IP addresses being contacted. Under such conditions, the infected victim computers attempt to make contact with the hardcoded domain name that is built into the Necurs malware. This is the domain from which the infected computers get their instructions on how to engage in the illegal activity. This command and control domain, listed in Exhibit 2, can be disrupted by transferring is to a domain registrar account under Microsoft's control, as requested in Microsoft's proposed temporary restraining order in this matter. Granting Microsoft possession of the domain in Exhibit 2 will enable Microsoft to channel all communications to this domain to secure servers, and thereby cut off one of the only remaining means that Defendants have to communicate with the infected computers.

75. Further, because the primary command and control IP addresses are not being contacted, infected computers in the botnet have reverted to the secondary command and control communications channel by contacting peer computers in the peer to peer network, seeking any available lists of existing command and control IP addresses to contact. As discussed, Microsoft has developed a comprehensive list of these command and control IP addresses used by the Necurs botnet and has developed automated code that cycles through the most recent distributed lists of command and control IP addresses seeking communication. If a command and control IP address responds with the correct response and encryption key, the IP address is then reported by Microsoft and distributed to global Computer Emergency Response Teams and Internet Service Providers responsible for those IP addresses, globally, via the Microsoft Cyber Threat Intelligence Program. Microsoft has built a comprehensive list of partners that includes global ISPs and country CERTs which will then block specific botnet traffic to the reported command and control IP address as part of the disruption strategy. Thus, these actions will also cut off one of the only remaining means that Defendants have to communicate with the infected computers.

76. Similarly, as discussed, Microsoft has developed automated code which monitors this peer to peer network looking for new configuration files. If a new configuration file is reported on the network it is reported to other Microsoft sensors for aforementioned verification process. As part of the disruption strategy, Microsoft will be publishing all known super node IP addresses in the Microsoft Cyber Threat Intelligence Program partner network for remediation. Super nodes will be given the highest priority for the remediation strategy as they will deliver the largest disruptive impact.[7] Thus, these actions too will cut off one of the only remaining means that Defendants have to communicate with the infected computers.

77. Thus, through technical means, Microsoft's threat intelligence and partner relationships, Microsoft is able to disrupt and block the Necurs botnet's command and control IP addresses and disrupt the command and control infrastructure in the foregoing ways.

78. Once the command and control IP addresses and hardcoded domains are disrupted and removed from the control of the Defendants, the remaining mechanism for the Defendants to attempt to regain control of the Necurs botnet are the numerous Domain Generation Algorithm (DGA) domains discussed earlier in this declaration and set forth in Exhibit 3. These domains can be disrupted by preventing their registration, thus preventing Defendants from gaining control of them, as requested in Microsoft's proposed temporary restraining order in this matter. Preventing Defendants from registering these domains will thereby cut off the last remaining fallback means that Defendants will use to communicate with the infected computers.

79. In the aggregate, the foregoing steps, which will be carried out upon entry of the

[7] Microsoft will also offer its AV cleaning tool free of charge for remediation of infected Necurs computers: Customers can use the following link to download Windows Defender: https://support.microsoft.com/en-us/help/14210/security-essentials-download requested temporary restraining order, will prevent the Defendants from accessing their command and control infrastructure, will cut off Defendants' ability to communicate with the infected victim computers, and will effectively disable the operation of the Necurs botnet.[8] This is the only means by which the Necurs botnet can be disabled and the serious harm to Microsoft and to millions of computer users can be mitigated and prevented.

80. I believe that the only way to suspend the injury caused to Microsoft, its consumers and the public, is to take the steps described in the [Proposed] Ex Parte Temporary Restraining Order and Order to Show Cause Re Preliminary Injunction ("Proposed TRO"). This relief will significantly hinder the Necurs botnet's monetization and capability and operational control, and stop the harmful activities of the Defendants.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge. Executed this 5th day of March, 2020, in New York, New York.

Jason B. Lyons

[8] The proposed order would permit, however, Microsoft and trusted cybersecurity research organizations called the Registrar of Last Resort and The Shadowserver Foundation to, eventually, register some of these DGA domains, for purposes of research into the infected computer base and development of better means to ultimately clean the Necurs malware off of victim computers.

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE'

October 2013 – Present Microsoft Corporation
Digital Crimes Unit
Microsoft Cyber Crime Center

- Work with public (law enforcement, country certs) and private sectors, and develop international partnerships to support malware disruptions on a global scale
- Conduct proactive malware investigations to identify critical command control infrastructure and to develop disruption strategy to eliminate or severely cripple cyber-criminal infrastructure.
- Document and identify monetization schemes utilized by cyber-criminals ranging from online advertising fraud, ransomware, and targeted financial fraud.
- Work with the Microsoft legal team to develop new legal strategies to disrupt cyber crime through both civil and criminal proceedings.
- Collect electronic evidence to support global malware disruptions and develop criminal referrals for law enforcement.

- Enhance Microsoft's Cyber Threat Intelligence Program (CTIP) which empowers ISP and country CERTS too identify victims of cybercrime.
- Provide expert court testimony with the support of written declarations describing the threat and impact of malware threats on the Microsoft ecosystems.
- Lead and participate in security community working groups that support cybercrime disruption.
- Work with Microsoft Malware Protection Center (MMPC), and other Anti-Virus vendors, to enhance detection of malware and to assist in the development of disruption strategies.

Jun 2012 – Sep 2013 Xerox
Director of Digital Forensics, eDiscovery, and Incident Response
Dallas, TX

- Responsible for investigating, reporting, and responding to information security incidents worldwide.
- Manages an incident team who utilizes various forensic techniques to investigate information security incidents to include computer forensics, log analysis, network forensics, Intrusion Detection System (IDS) alerts, and malware analysis.
- Developed threat and risk matrices based on incidents types and report findings to upper management.
